

(FROM THE EVENING MAIL.)

The Cadets.

A WOMAN'S IMPRESSIONS.

On Thursday morning I sallied forth armed and equipped as the law directs. In other words, arrayed in all the outward adornment suitable to a woman of fashion who wishes to look her best. I am not going to describe what I wore, as the spring fashions are not yet out, and it is no use to admit the general reader, especially those of "the masculine persuasion," into the mysteries of a lady's toilette. My object this morning was first and foremost to

SEE THE CADETS.

The sun was shining as if it had been midsummer, though the air was biting in a truly wintry style, as I made my way about half-past eleven to the Forty-second street depot. The papers said that the "boys in grey" would arrive in town at 9 o'clock, and allowing three hours for their journey across the city, I thought they should appear at the monster railroad terminus about twelve; but, alas! for the vanity of human expectations. Cadets are like pretty women, they like to enhance their charms by making people wait for them, and I found there was very little probability of their appearance for at least two hours. I remained sitting on one of the curiously uncomfortable seats which Mr. Vanderbilt has provided for his "guests," thinking what I should do next. I made an elaborate study of the heads which adorn the long sofas at regular intervals and strove to discover who or what they were intended to represent. They could not be portraits of the Commodore. No, they were too young. Were they masculine heads at all? On a nearer inspection, even this seemed doubtful; they had round cheeks, classic features, waving locks; finally I decided that they were "neither male nor female," perhaps as a delicate deference to that coming time when all political distinctions of sex will be removed, so that no offence can be given to future voters of either gender.

THEY COME.

My companions in waiting were several lounging men and three blooming girls. On a sudden there was a simultaneous movement on the part of these damsels, a rush to the window, a deepening of color and a triple giggle. The cause was explained when the door opened and the veritable Cadets came in. Tall, well made fellows, with the dark and somewhat weather-beaten complexions that distinguish these real soldiers from the time they first begin to encounter the exposure of perpetual open air drills. Stalwart specimens of young manhood they looked as they stood in the middle of the room the "cynosure of every eye." Their knapsacks and blankets strapped to their backs denoted marching order, their bright muskets looked like real business, and their bell buttons, so dear to every girl's heart, recalled the dances and flirtations of West Point. One of them had on his sleeve the double chevrons denoting a sergeant, and they both were very pink in the cheeks.

CADET GOSSIP.

With one of these young gentlemen I fell into a conversation, which was as follows:

"Had you a nice time in Washington?"

"Oh, ever so! Only we were disappointed that we couldn't stay over last night."

"Why, did you expect to?"

"Yes, we did; we all behaved so well we thought we should have our leave extended."

"How do you mean, behaved well?"

"Oh, none of us got drunk, you know; and that's about the only thing we could do that is wrong."

"I'm not so sure about that; the papers seem to think you made sad work with the ladies' hearts; wasn't that rather naughty?"

"I don't know," a smile of agreeable amusement overspread his pleasant face.

"The young ladies were very kind."

"Of course, you Cadets always carry off all the pretty girls. Had you a good time at the ball?"

"Ever so jolly!"

"Wasn't it cold?"

"No, at least I wasn't cold. I thought it warmer than any other place I was at in Washington."

"And you had plenty of partners?"

"Yes, indeed! with enthusiasm; there wasn't a Cadet but what had a lady on his arm all the time. I danced so long that I was too late for roll call at half-past two in the morning."

"And how comes it that you are not with the rest of the corps now?"

"He looked the picture of health. 'That is, my feet were hurt in marching, and so I got off, and thought I would come directly up here.'"

"And you don't know when the rest will be here?"

"Not before half-past one, I fancy."

This was clearly quite too long to wait, and after some further chat with my friendly son of Mars, I took my leave of him and of the depot, and made my way down town.

THE TROUB.

The streets were crowded with ladies, "mostly handsome and all well dressed," one might say. Every now and then I passed one wearing one of those white ties that give our young women such an odd, semi-civilized look, as if the last barriers were down and we had quantities of "sweet girl graduates" from the theological seminary pervading our city.

All these "dames and demoiselles" were moved by one desire—to see the Cadets, and already the sidewalks and the steps of houses were beginning to gather expectant crowds. There was some time yet to wait, however, before "the dogs of war" were let loose on Broadway. Growing tired of uncertainty I appealed to a policeman for information.

"How soon do you think the Cadets will come?"

"In about fifteen minutes; they are at the armory now, but I guess they've stayed pretty long over the co-slation."

This same collation accounted for the prolonged delay, doubtless, for it was another half hour before the policemen began to clear the streets and the strains of martial music sounded on the car.

THE PARADE.

Presently they came in sight, first the citizen soldiery, the ever favorite Seventh. They looked well and marched creditably, but the real enthusiasm burst forth over the West Pointers. What a fine body of young fellows! Too good many times over either to be fool for gunpowder or to eat out their hearts in inaction!

"Don't they keep step well," said one enthusiastic admirer.

"What funny caps they wear," commented a little miss.

They are very young; not a moultache among them," said a pretty little belle, with a toss of her head.

Ah, but if she had known! There are plenty of stout fellows there who could raise a handsome crop of dark or light hair on the upper lip. It is the army regulation, and not the "youthfulness" that prevents the moultaches.

Well, the gay procession presently passed, the rush of Broadway closed up behind it, and the Cadets' pleasure trip is one of the things of the past.

STATE ITEMS.

Ex-Gov. Ward was robbed of a valuable diamond pin during a recent visit to Washington.

Some sacrilegious thieves broke into Trinity church, Elizabeth, on Friday, and drank all the communion wine.

The work of laying the rails on the Watchung railroad has been commenced. It will probably be in running order within the next two months.

The failure of Messrs. Baldwin & Wood, extensive grocers of Newark has been reported. Their liabilities are said to amount to several thousand dollars.

Jeremiah Roach was struck by a Pennsylvania Railroad train at East Newark last Saturday night, and thrown completely over the smokstack of the engine. His death was instantaneous.

Mr. Martin R. Dennis is about visiting Louisville to inspect the steam street cars reported to be in successful operation in that city with a view to introducing them into Newark, should the scheme appear practicable.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Baxter steam horse car is in successful operation upon the street railways in Louisville, Kentucky.

The French Government has, up to this date, paid to Germany 35,000,000 francs on account of the war indemnity.

Over 30,000 men are expected to join in the parade in New York on St. Patrick's Day. Fifty societies will be represented.

The powder magazine at Mont Valerien, one of the fortifications of Paris, exploded on Friday last with a terrific detonation, scattering the masonry in all directions and shaking the fort to its foundation. A number of soldiers were killed and wounded by the explosion, the cause of which is unknown.

Some years ago there was a legend about that Noah had been permitted to revisit the earth. He wandered about from country to country, ill at ease in any of them. Nothing was natural, nothing as it used to be. Steamboats and railroads, telegraph wires and lucifer matches, with a thousand other innovations, met him at every turn.

The legend says at length he reached Spain; then the sadness of his countenance changed, his eyes sparkled with delight, and in the exuberance of his joy he threw up his hat and thanked heaven that there was a country which remained just as he had left it.
